My husband got Xm Radio for himself for when he was on the road in his truck. I traveled with him a few times and liked the radio tremendously and my husband got one for me for my car and the house. We pay for this service monthly and appreciate all the information that is available to us and think it is wrong to take it off-air because of it being efficient in offering all information that we as paying consumers need.

The traffic and weather channels have been very helpful to me when I am traveling alone to see my parents in 2 far states from me and also for my husband as he prepares to make a long haul and needs to know which route has the best conditions and the time he is traveling. As we pay for this I feel the NAB has no right to try to take it away.
